

For just $4/night on Airbnb, the Bend, Oregon location—aka, "the World's Last Blockbuster" will loan itself out for what looks to be the ultimate nostalgic, socially-distanced hang.

The living room-style space in the center of the store includes a pull-out couch, air mattress, bean bag chair, an old-school VCR, and several shelves worth of snacks that guests are free to raid. In a gloomier, but necessary nod to the present, they'll also throw in face coverings, disinfectant wipes, and hand sanitizer. "So let loose, blast the boombox and wear your favorite '90s denim so that you feel right at home in another era," the hosts write.

The deal comes with a few caveats, though: Only three nights are up for grabs—9/18, 9/19, and 9/20—and the bidding (unclear whether it's first-come, first-serve) starts next Monday. Best of luck to all of the Oregon-based nostalgia-seekers, and remember: Be kind. Please rewind.

Mike Darling is an executive editor at Men's Health where he assigns and edits coverage around the brand's core subject areas, including fitness, style and grooming, sex and relationships, and technology and gear.